

World Jackal Day

Almost on every continent, there is an animal species that is traditionally addressed as “jackal”. Even though modern scientific studies show, that they are less closely related than previously thought, they all have in common that they are smaller to medium sized canids of similar physical appearance and behaviour. Wherever they occur, they play an important role not only in human folklore and myths, but also in the ecosystem. Today, a lot of research is conducted on these animals as some of them show a highly interesting range expansion in recent years, whereas others potentially decline within their range. The World Jackal Day highlights this very interesting group of animals and closely related species by providing newest information on all aspects of these fascinating creatures: their diet, space-use or behaviour, but also human dimensions in regard of hunting and co-existence. The date was chosen as the beginning of birthing period of golden jackals in Europe, when approximately at that time the new generation sees the world.

The “jackals” of the world:

Golden jackal (Canis aureus)	Black-backed jackal (Lupulella mesomelas)	Side-striped jackal (Schaeffia adusta)	Koyote / „American Jackal“ (Canis latrans)
African wolf / „Egyptian jackal“ (Canis lupaster)	Ethiopian Wolf / „Eth. Jackal“ (Canis simensis)	Culpeo / Andean jackal (Lycalopex culpaeus)	...and closely related species
